Gender Hoax

The "Gender Hoax" revolves around the controversial and increasingly debated topic of "gender-affirming care," particularly focusing on the use of puberty blockers in children. Elon Musk, a prominent figure in the tech world, has been vocal about his personal experience, citing the tragic loss of his son, Xavier, to what he refers to as the “woke mind virus.” Musk alleges that his son’s death was a result of being deceived into taking puberty blockers, which he was told were “reversible.” Musk claims these drugs caused permanent damage to his son’s hormonal system and brain.

Puberty blockers, which are commonly prescribed to children experiencing gender dysphoria, have been shown to interfere with natural hormone production. While marketed as a way to delay puberty and provide time for children to explore their gender identity, Musk argues that they have lasting, detrimental effects, including irreversible damage to brain function. According to Musk, medical professionals are incentivized to prescribe these drugs, which are costly and potentially harmful, for financial reasons. Doctors who administer these treatments are often paid thousands of dollars for each dose, further fueling the discussion about the profit-driven nature of the practice.

One of the key drugs involved in this controversy is Lupron, originally developed as a treatment for prostate cancer. The drug faced initial resistance due to its dangerous side effects but found a market in the urology community when its formulation was modified. Despite its questionable effectiveness, Lupron gained popularity, especially among specialists who continued to prescribe it. As of now, the drug is still prescribed for various off-label uses, including the treatment of gender dysphoria in children. Musk and other critics assert that the use of these drugs is not based on proven science, but rather on a system that profits from their widespread administration.

The medical community’s guidelines for treating children with gender dysphoria, which recommend the use of puberty blockers, are criticized for being based on an unproven theory about gender identity. A group setting these guidelines has allegedly admitted privately that they do not fully understand the long-term effects of these treatments. Furthermore, the guidelines reportedly recommend administering these drugs even if the child is unsure about transitioning, raising ethical concerns about medical consent and the potential for harm.

The conversation surrounding the use of puberty blockers is further complicated by the fact that many of the advocates for these treatments downplay the risks associated with them. Critics like the "Midwestern Doc" emphasize that the dangers of estrogen are often overstated, while the far more dangerous puberty blockers are falsely promoted as “safe and effective.” The financial incentives for doctors prescribing these drugs and the lack of solid scientific evidence supporting their use continue to fuel the debate.

Musk’s personal experience has brought significant attention to these issues, especially considering his high profile and influence. By speaking out, Musk aims to expose what he sees as a dangerous medical practice driven by financial motives and societal pressures, hoping to “destroy the woke mind virus” that he believes is spreading through public policy and medical practices.

In summary, the “Gender Hoax” highlights concerns about the safety, ethics, and profitability of gender-affirming care, particularly in relation to the use of puberty blockers. Critics argue that these treatments are often prescribed without a solid scientific basis, putting vulnerable children at risk for long-term harm.

https://t.me/SidneyPowell/5980 This is going to be great. Gettem whoever is playing Musk! Elon Musk Vows to Destroy the Woke Mind Virus After Losing His Son to ‘Gender-Affirming Care’

“My son Xavier is dead, killed by the woke mind virus.”

Elon Musk lost his son after being deceived into giving him “reversible” puberty blockers. What they don't tell you is that these drugs permanently damage the brain's hormone production.

Moreover, doctors wouldn't administer these dangerous injections until they were paid thousands for each dose.

These drugs are incredibly dangerous and have caused severe injuries to men, women, and children for decades, often prescribed for off-label uses not approved by the FDA. Why? Because doctors were financially incentivized to prescribe them.

The first such drug, Lupron, was initially too dangerous to approve and was eventually marketed as a last-resort treatment for prostate cancer. When it didn't sell, its manufacturer reformulated it to enrich urologists. Despite 53% of urologists admitting it didn't work, it gained popularity.

@MidwesternDoc strongly argues that these drugs are being pushed on our children primarily because of their profitability. Key points include:

• The justification for these drugs is based on an unproven theory.

• The group setting the guidelines admitted privately they have no idea what they are doing.

• This group emphasizes the dangers of estrogen (which isn't profitable) while ignoring the far more dangerous puberty blockers, falsely claiming they are “safe and effective.”

• The guidelines urge doctors to administer these drugs regardless of circumstances, even if a child is uncertain about transitioning.

It often takes high-profile victims like Elon Musk to bring attention to such rackets, but people really need to be informed about this. Start by reading the article by A Midwestern Doctor's article in the comment below.
